BRAZIL SUGAR

BRAZIL SUGAR

Our sugar is sourced from the world's top growing regions and meets the highest food safety qualifications.

In Brazil, sugar cane is one of the largest agricultural products by volume and dollars produced in Brazil. Today, Brazil is the world's largest sugar producer and exporter, accounting for approximately 20% of total global production and more than 40% of world exports. Sugar cane grows well in Brazil due to Brazil's large landmass and geographic position near the equator and tropical environs. Approximately 60 - 70% of Brazil's sugar is exported each year. It was the Portuguese who introduced sugar cane to Brazil around five centuries ago.

Sugar cane can be used to make not only sugar, but also alcohol, which was the primary driver for sugar production in Brazil since the 1970's. As sugar cane can be made into alcohol-based fuel, it was the government of Brazil's program ProAlcool that drove these massive increases in cane production. Today, sugar cane accounts for about 80% of sugar produced worldwide. Popular Products : Raw & Refined Cane Sugar, ICUMSA 45, ICUMSA 100, ICUMSA 600-1200.

THAILAND SUGAR

In Thailand, Sugar Cane is one of the largest agricultural products. Sugar cane originated in South-East Asia and is actually a grass. The cane's fibrous stalks are rich in the sugar sucrose, which is crushed out of the cane and once the water content is evaporated out, becomes the raw sugar most consumers are used to. Thailand is the world's second largest sugar exporter, after Brazil. Since 2010 the government of Thailand has worked to transition rice farms to sugar farms in order to increase production. This has not been without controversy due to sugar cane's use of the herbicide Paraquat, which is toxic to humans and animals. Despite this, the ready global market for sugar and falling prices for rice has made this transition irresistible.
